ATTEMPED TO STEAL A RING.—Yesterday a middle-aged man stepped into Oxtoby & Duffield's jewelry store, and asked to be shown some ladies 'rings. After looking and pricing for a time, the man said he would probably call again, as he was much pleased with the assortment shown. Mr. Oxtoby observed that the tray containing the rings was one short, and calfed the man's attention to the fact. The fellow stoutly denied any knowledge of the whereabouts of the missing ring, but upon being informed that it's prompt return would he be allowed to leave the store without being searched and arrested, the would-be thie commenced rimmaging his pockets.
